A woman attending a theatre performance that takes place in an old house begins to realize that she is seeing people on stage that no one else see -- a young maid being terrorized by a cruel master, ghosts from the house's past.

ATTACK OF THE ZOMBOTS IN 3D!!!

United States

87 pages

Screenplay

Writer: VJ Maury

Sulking Cinema Manager Roger Savior is thrown out of his own theater on the evening of a 3D zombie movie festival. Mitzi Kalen and Chloe Rush are two young women who meet at the same place on what turns out to be a lame internet group date. When the lights go down, the show turns bloody as the zombies leap off the screen and wreak havoc on the customers and cinema. The zombies are actually Zombots: half-zombies and half-robots that are built to kill. They are being projected through the screen using an evil digital 3D technology. Mitzi, Chloe and Roger make an unlikely alliance against the intense Zombot menace. They, along with a cast of likeable geeks, survive in the creepy nooks and crannies of the movie theater. Eventually, their fight goes all the way to the other side of the screen. Attack of the Zombots in 3D! is set in a cinema, a location that has never been used for a horror movie. The hard-working service staff combined with the familiar box office, concessions stand and projection booths will never be seen in the same way again. The movie will also introduce a new monster archetype in the guise of the Zombot. This original cinema-monster combination is ripe for sequels. The movie will have broad appeal as a horror film with ironic self-aware humor.
